than one standpoint.

Wherever possible we should gladly give any aid we can to a weaker sister republic which is endeavoring to achieve stability and prosperity. It is an ungenterous thing for us to refuse such aid; and it is foolish not to give it in a way that will make it really effective, and therefore of direct benefit to the people concerned—and of indirect benefit to them. In the last resort, and only in the last resort, it may occasionally be necessary to interfere by exercising what is virtually an international police power, if only to avoid seeing some European power forced to exercise it. In short, while we must interfere always cautiously, and never wantonity yet, on rait may be necessary to interfere, unless we are willing to confess ourselves too feeble for the task we have undertaken, and to avow that we are willing to surrender it into stronger hands; and such confession and avowal I know my countrymen too well to believe that they will ever make.

This consisted of the singing of a number of songs, especially written for the occasion. The last one, entitled "You Are All Right, Teddy!" caused the President to smile broadly. The President was then conducted to a stand in front of the academy, where he made his speech. He as follows: y friends, let me say what a pleas

A Strong Trio.

While all of the Virginians played a good, plucky game, against men whose weight should have outclassed them, still to Johnson, who made a great run and who tackled like a veritable flend, and to Warren and Barry, the ends, belong the lion's share of glory. Take away the lion's share of glory. the lion's share of glory. Take away Virginia's ends, and the team would lose its greatest strength.
For Bucknell, the playing of her backs

For Bucknell, the playing of her backs was of the highest order. Unable to gain around Virginia's ends, Bucknell continually worked McNinch, Olendorf and Tolbert in tandem plays through Virginia's tackles and guards, and it was not often that the trio falled to make the necessary advance.

In the line, composed of men whose average weight exceeded 200 pounds, Bucknell possessed a tower of strength with which Virginia could do very little. It was by quickness alone that the Southerners were able to accomplish gains.

But one accident marred the afterno sport. Warren, one of Virginia's crack players, had his shoulder broken and will be out of the game for the rest of the season.

Waples also was retired on account of a slight injury, and Hile was put in to fill his place.

For Bucknell, Tolbert was knocked out, and Frymeyer reigned in his stead. Battered falls, strained ankles, scalp wounds and shoulder bruises there were without number, but these are affairs of but slight moment, and a dash of cold water in the face performs without fall an instant and miraculous cure.

Mrs. Bryant, or Mrs. McDowell, said last night that Mrs. Perkins had also threatened her in the afternoon. She said that Mrs. Perkins had visited her home Friday night and had appeared to be on friendly terms, but that yesterday afternoon, after the afternoon papers were read, and the statement that she made to the effect that Mrs. Perkins had poisoned a dog some time before the death of the first child, was seen, that she (Mrs. Perkins) became very angry, and with her father, Mr. Johnson, and her husband, came to her front porch and used all kinds of threats. Mrs. McDowell said that she was forced to leave her home by the rear entrance, and that she feared bedlly harm at the hands of Mr. Johnson.
